The Global Warming Express, a New Book about the Environmental Crisis, Written by Kids for Kids

JULY 15, 2017: SANTA FE, NM—This book is a clarion call to all who care about our planet's future and what they can do to help. Written by Santa Fe middle-schoolers Marina Weber and Joanna Whysner, The Global Warming Express illustrates, through playful animal characters, some of the greatest challenges our Earth is facing. (ISBN 978-1-938288-93-7, $14.95, 132 pages, paperback, 4-color illustrations throughout, September 2017). In the book, the girls jump on board a magical train fueled by hope that's headed to see the President in Washington, DC. Along the way, they witness such calamities for the planet as the tar sands of Canada, the Gulf Coast oil spill, and the dangers of fracking. Endangered animals join them to spread the word about their precarious situations.

The book is suitable for young people from ages eight and up. It not only entertains but also informs with facts and science about the environment. The book is published by Terra Nova Books (www.terranovabooks.com), an independent publisher in Santa Fe, New Mexico, whose books are distributed to the trade by SCB Distributors of Gardena, California (800-729-6423).

Author Marina Weber has been inspired to activism from an early age, including writing a letter to the president. She and her friend, illustrator Joanna Whysner, worked together to tell the story of the dangers of pollution and global warming. In the book, they jump on the Global Warming Express to deliver what may be the world's most important message.
